ROMERÍA

Many towns in Spain and Latin America maintain the Christian tradition of going on a romería. This is a pilgrimage to a rural chapel to honour the Virgin Mary or a patron saint. Some of these churches are on sites used by pre-Christian worshippers. People may walk for many miles, praying to the Virgin or saint for a special favour, showing gratitude for a previous one or praying for healing. The pilgrimages are often festive occasions where music and food play a key role.

SALIDA AL MAR

The War of the Pacific, fought victoriously by Chile against Peru and Bolivia (1879-1883), was to have a huge influence on the later development of all three countries. The major incentive for turning a territorial dispute into a war was the rich deposits of nitrates (then a vital raw material for the production of fertilizers and explosives) in the Atacama Desert. By acquiring the Atacama, Chile also deprived Bolivia of its only access to the sea at the port of Antofagasta, with inevitably damaging consequences for the future economic and commercial development of the country. Bolivia's desire for a salida al mar ("outlet to the sea") led it to seek alternative access to the Atlantic, and this was partly behind the outbreak of the horrific Chaco War with Paraguay (1932-1935), though the interest of foreign oil companies in possible oil deposits in the Chaco region was at least as important a factor. Today, Bolivia has adopted the peaceful road of negotiations with Chile to resolve the problem.

sanfermines nmpl = festival held in Pamplona in July during which bulls are run through the streets of the town

SANFERMINES

The sanfermines of Pamplona, celebrations in honour of the local martyr Saint Fermín, are one of the most widely known of Spanish festivals, in no small part due to their being immortalized by Hemingway in "The Sun Also Rises" (1926). For a week on or around the feast of Saint Fermín (7 July) the people of Pamplona and visitors throw themselves wholeheartedly into non-stop celebration. The most eagerly awaited event, apart from the afternoon bullfights themselves, is the "encierro", the legendary "running of the bulls" at daybreak, where bulls are let loose to run through the city streets on the way to the bullring, pursuing crowds of local and visiting men who try to outrun them. During the three minutes or so of the run there is constant danger that runners (especially inexperienced ones) might be injured, even fatally, and over the years there have been more than a dozen fatalities, and hundreds of runners have been gored. Yet the running of the bulls goes on year after year, offering a unique opportunity for those so inclined to test their nerve and swiftness of foot.

SANTERÍA

On Cuban plantations, African slaves (mostly of the Yoruba tribe) were banned from practising their own religion, so devised a way to worship their gods ("orishas") by giving them the names of Christian saints. For example, they changed the name of the thunder god "Changó" to "Santa Bárbara", and "Ochún", the goddess of love, was identified with "la Virgen de la Caridad del Cobre", Cuba's offical Catholic patron. Despite the disapproval of the Catholic authorities, santería (as this "saint worship" is known) and its rituals have survived into the present, with some forms even becoming a tourist attraction.

SEMANA SANTA

Semana Santa (Holy Week) runs from Palm Sunday to Easter Sunday, the day when Christians celebrate the resurrection of Jesus. The activities of the week can be more or less religious in nature, depending on the region. In Spain (especially in Andalusia) there are spectacular nocturnal processions with "pasos", which are floats carried through the streets on the shoulders of bearers, with huge banks of candles and dramatic sculptures of Jesus - crucified or resurrected - or the Virgin Mary, dressed in elaborate, jewel-studded costumes. The "pasos" are solemnly escorted by "cofrades", hooded members of a Catholic brotherhood or "cofradía", who march in step to the beat of a drum. Some walk barefoot and flagellate themselves as a sign of Christian repentance, while the atmosphere on other processions can be much more festive.

SERVICIO MILITAR

Military conscription is currently under review in many Latin American countries. Peru and Chile have substituted obligatory service with a voluntary system as in Honduras. Argentina recently opted for a professional army (as in Spain) and Paraguay is considering doing away with its armed forces altogether. Uruguay has never had military conscription, and Panama and Costa Rica have no army.

SINCRETISMO RELIGIOSO

Sincretismo religioso is a characteristic cultural phenomenon in Latin America, and the result of the fusion of the different religious beliefs of the peoples who have inhabited the continent: indigenous peoples, Catholic Spanish and Portuguese colonizers, and African slaves. Sincretismo has many forms, where the imposed Christian belief system shows evidence of an indigenous substrate, or the grafting on of African elements, as in "candomblé" of Brazil, or "santería" in the Caribbean. Other manifestations are the interiors, exteriors and statuary of colonial churches, which would have been decorated by indigenous craftsmen. A statue of the Virgin Mary, for example, may be given the features or attributes of a pre-Christian goddess of maternity and fertility.

SON

The Cuban music known as son evolved from a fusion of African and Spanish musical influences in the late 19th century, and is the basis of much of today's Caribbean music, such as salsa or mambo. Before the 1920s, when it became widely popular, son was mostly enjoyed by the lower classes and was once even banned for being immoral. A son group usually consists of the "tres" (a double-stringed guitar), bongos, "claves" or "palos" (a pair of sticks which are struck together to give a beat), a normal guitar, a bass guitar and voice, although there are many variations. Among the greatest exponents of son were Benny Moré (1919-63) and Arsenio Rodríguez (1911-72).

SPANGLISH

Spanglish refers to a range of linguistic phenomena which result from the contact between English and Spanish. The Spanish spoken in the border region between the United States and Mexico contains many words which blend English and Spanish to create new words such as "ringuear" (to ring), "mopear" (to mop) and "groserías" (groceries - in standard Spanish this means "rude words or actions").

Speakers of Spanish living in the United States, whether descended from the original Spanish settlers or first, second or even third generation immigrants, can often use Spanish and English so interchangeably that, in what linguists call "code-switching", single sentences can become a mixture of both languages, for example: "so you todavía haven't decided lo que vas a hacer". Some regard such linguistic mixtures as inferior, or a semi-language, but their various forms are increasingly the subject of academic research.

TAMBO

Throughout their empire the Incas constructed special rest stops along the routes used by the emperor, his court and the army. These centres were called tambos. In each tambo there were granaries and stores of food, clothing and ammunition for the travellers, as well as buildings to lodge them, bathhouses and even temples for religious ceremonies. As they were on the routes between important places, the tambos developed over time to end up as important population centres in their own right. Many survive today, as do the ruins of many others, which are of historic and anthropological interest, such as Ollantaytambo and Tambomachay, in Cusco.

TANGO

Tango music and dance had its origins in the poor quarters of Buenos Aires in the late-nineteenth century. It sprang from the interaction between local rhythms, including Afro-Cuban elements, and the European influences brought by immigrants, especially from Spain and Italy. In its early stages, tango was rooted in the working class life of Buenos Aires, just like "lunfardo", the linguistic melting pot that is the dialect of tango culture. Tango later gained wider acceptance, especially after it was developed into a ballroom dance in Paris, and as it was popularized in songs dealing with the life and loves of the common man, and the ups and downs of city life. The greatest singer of these songs was Carlos Gardel (1890-1935), who also starred in numerous tango-themed films. Astor Piazzolla (1921-92) was one of the most outstanding players of the "bandoneón", the accordion so characteristic of tango music. Among women singers, Tita Merello (1904-) was remarkable for the feisty defiance of her songs. The tango, in its many manifestations, is the living portrait of the River Plate area in general, and of Buenos Aires and its people in particular.

TELENOVELA

Telenovelas are TV soap operas which are hugely popular in Spanish-speaking countries, and are even exported as far afield as Russia and Eastern Europe. They have their roots in the "radionovela", which first developed in Cuba in the 1930s. Their stories can run for hundreds of episodes, eventually leading to a climactic ending. Some have historical settings, and while a few have dealt with topical controversies, many are far removed from the everyday life of most viewers, and typically depict an upper-class family stricken by fate, tragedy or passion.

TEXTILES INDÍGENAS

In Latin America, many indigenous people still manufacture their traditional textiles by hand, as they did in pre-Columbian times. Made almost exclusively by women, these textiles include "molas" (embroidery from Guatemala and Panama), "huipiles" (shawls from southern Mexico and Guatemala) and "aguayos" (alpaca wool shawls from Bolivia and Peru). "Molas" are cloth panels made of brightly colored pieces of fabric sewn together to depict animals or a landscape. They can then be used to decorate colourful traditional blouses. "Huipiles" and "aguayos" are woven on looms with a narrow geometrical border and sometimes show ritual animals and objects, or even entire stories. In pre-Columbian times such textiles were worn as ceremonial costumes, given as gifts, offered up to the gods and buried with the dead. Today they are used in everyday accessories, such as blankets, trimmings, handbags and shoes, and "huipiles" and "aguayos" are used for carrying loads (and babies).

TOROS

Bullfighting is a highly controversial topic in all of the countries where it takes place. As well as in Spain itself, it is popular in many Latin American countries, especially Peru and Mexico, though it has been banned in Uruguay since 1912.
Whatever one's views on them, bullfights ("corridas de toros") are certainly a unique form of entertainment. The fight begins with the band playing as the mounted officials ("alguacilillos") ride into the ring, followed by a majestic parade of bullfighters ("torero" is preferred to "matador" as the name of the profession). During this parade (or "paseíllo"), the bullfighters, wearing their colourful costumes (known as "trajes de luces"), lead in their teams of assistants ("subalternos") and picadors. First the bull is provoked into charging by a series of passes (the "pases de capote") made with a red and yellow coloured cape. This is followed by the three main stages of the bullfight. In the first, the "tercio de varas", mounted picadors jab the bull with a spear; in the second, the "tercio de banderillas", small barbed darts ("banderillas") are thrust into the bull's back as it charges past the "banderillero"; and finally, the "tercio de muerte" features the bullfighter and his red cape ("muleta") as he confronts and kills the bull, and (with luck) makes a triumphal exit.

TRATAMIENTO

In Latin America a lot of importance is attached to forms of address, which is hardly surprising in societies with pronounced differences between social classes. In many countries higher education is a privilege still largely restricted to the wealthy few and much significance is attached to university degrees and the titles that go with them. Titles such as "licenciado" (graduate, much used in Mexico), "doctor" (used, for example, in Colombia and Uruguay) and "ingeniero" (engineer) are used to address people felt to have social standing, sometimes even when they don't actually possess the degree in question. Such titles are also commonly used on business cards and in addresses.

NUEVA TROVA CUBANA

In the 1960s, many young Cuban singers sought to express the profound social changes that had resulted from the 1959 Revolution. These singer-songwriters sang of revolution, social injustice and love in ballads which drew on the influence of contemporary protest songs as well as traditional Cuban music, and often featured highly poetic lyrics. From the early 1970s these singers emerged as the Nueva Trova Cubana, and artists such as Silvio Rodríguez (1946-), Pablo Milanés (1943-) and Sara González (1949-) went on to achieve world-wide fame. A new generation of singers, the "Novísima Trova", continues this tradition today and highlights more recent social and political developments.

TUNA

Some Spanish university students participate in small musical groups called tunas, who for a small donation will sing popular serenades. They wear traditional 17th-century costumes and, playing a range of stringed instruments, they accompany wedding ceremonies and first communions. They still serenade young women under their windows. The first tunas date back to the 13th century, when hard-up students sang in taverns for a meal and a glance from their sweethearts. There are tunas all over Spain, and they are also found in Latin America (where they are more often known by the more general term "estudiantina").

LAS UVAS (DE LA SUERTE)

On New Year's Eve in Spain, it is traditional to eat a grape for each of the twelve strokes of midnight for good luck in each of the months of the coming year. If you make a wish before each stroke and successfully eat the twelve grapes, your wishes will supposedly come true in the New Year. As midnight approaches people can be seen in the main squares of each town with a bunch of grapes in their hand, while others eat them at home watching the clock strike midnight on TV.

LA VIOLENCIA

On 9th April 1948, the leftist Liberal Party leader of Colombia, Jorge Eliécer Gaitán, was murdered in Bogotá. Popular outrage led to an outburst of violent street rioting (known as "el bogotazo"), which was put down within a few days. However, this sparked off ten years of virtual civil war in the countryside between supporters of the Liberal and Conservative parties in which some 300,000 people died. This period is known as la Violencia, and only ended when the two parties, united by their opposition to the dictatorship of General Rojas Pinilla (1953-7), agreed to form a Frente Nacional under which they alternated in power over the next 16 years.

vosear vt to address as "vos"

voseo nm = practice of using the "vos" pronoun instead of "tú"

VOSEO

Voseo means the use of the "vos" form instead of "tú" in the second person singular. This is the norm in the River Plate region, where it is always used with a special form of the verb in the present tense (e.g. "vos tenés" instead of "tú tienes"). It is also found in other areas of Latin America. In Chile and areas of Bolivia, Peru and Venezuela, "tú" is also used, indicating slightly less informality. The forms "vos" and "tú" are used alternately in Central America, ranging from mostly "vos" in Costa Rica to mostly "tú" in Panama. In these areas, "vos" may be used with the normal second person singular verb form (e.g. "vos tienes").

-4. (vocativo) you (plural); ¡eh, ~, apartaos de ahí! hey, you (lot), get away from there!

VOSOTROS

In Spain, there are two ways to express the second person plural: one implies familiarity with the audience (vosotros) while the other indicates more courtesy ("ustedes"). Vosotros takes the verb in the second person plural, and "ustedes" the third person plural. This double option does not exist in Latin America, where the only form available is "ustedes", except in the religious liturgy, where the vosotros is sometimes retained.

ZAPATISTAS

The Zapatista National Liberation Army ("Ejército Zapatista de Liberación Nacional"), which takes its name from the Mexican revolutionary Emiliano Zapata, is a guerrilla organization based in the southern Mexican state of Chiapas. The group hit the world headlines at the start of 1994, when armed Zapatistas occupied the town of San Cristobal de las Casas to proclaim their defence of the rights of the native Indians and their opposition to the NAFTA treaty with the United States, which had just come into force. After initial sporadic fighting with the Mexican army, a peace process was established under the San Andrés accords of February 1996, although this has so far failed to result in agreement with the government, and parts of Chiapas, particularly jungle areas, are still effectively under Zapatista control. The Zapatistas opened up a second front on the Internet, reaching out to sympathizers across the globe through the writings of their principal spokesman, who uses the name "Subcomandante Marcos".
